PROFITS MUST NOT

panies and banks were recipients of a large part of these dividends.

Added to this we must take into consideration that individual stockholders who received dividends were able to continue to buy goods and thus keep the wheels of trade and commerce moving, even if at a greatly decreased pace.

Government must exercise every possible care and precaution in determining just where the limitation of profits shall be placed in order to make sure that corporations are left with ample cash and other reserves to take care of the great recession in industrial activity after we have achieved military victory over our enemies.

YOUR ARMY

Decorations for courage and service to the state have been awarded from the dawn of history. It is probable they were originated to satisfy the ingrained human love of evidence of past prowess. Primitive man could keep such proofs — in the form of the skulls of animals, or of enemies — in a heap in front of his cave or hut. But as portions of the race became more or less civilized such display came to be considered unseemly if not impracticable. Cultured peoples preferred tokens to grisly proof of the deed and conferred chaplets and mural crowns upon their heroes. The mural crown went to the man who first planted his standard in a captured city. Other forms of chaplets went to the heroes who drove the enemy from before the walls or beat him in the field. As times, customs and sartorial fashions changed, the taste in decorations for service to the state changed too. The chaplets gave way to medals and for every-day use the medals gave place to ribbons which represented them.

General Washington, in 1782, instituted what probably was the first decoration for valor in the American Army — the Purple Heart. After the Continental Army was disbanded this decoration apparently was not awarded until it was revived in 1932, as the fifth ranking decoration awarded to personnel of the Army of the United States.

There are seven awards today in the Army of the United States. The highest is the Congressional Medal of Honor, which was established by Act of Congress in 1862. It is awarded in the name of Congress to each person who, while an officer or enlisted man of the Army, in action involving actual conflict with an enemy, distinguishes himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life, above and beyond the call of duty. In order to justify an award of the Medal of Honor, an officer or enlisted man must perform in action a deed of personal bravery to distinguish him for gallantry and intrepidity above his comrades, involving risk of life or the performance of more than ordinarily hazardous service, the omission of which would not justly subject him to censure for shortcoming or failure in the performance of his duty. So rarely has this decoration been awarded that prior to the World War of 1917-1918 only 1,723 medals of Honor had been issued and during that war only 96 of more than four million men in the National Army were awarded the decoration.

Next in rank to the Congressional Medal of Honor is the Distinguished Service Cross, a decoration instituted by Congress in 1918. It is awarded to persons who, while serving in any capacity in the Army of the United States, distinguish themselves by extraordinary heroism in connection with military operations against an armed enemy. About 6,800 Distinguished Service Crosses were won by officers and enlisted men in the World War.

The third ranking decoration, also instituted by Congress in 1918, is awarded to persons who, while serving in any capacity in the Army of the United States, distinguish themselves by exceptionally meritorious service to the government in a duty of great responsibility. There were approximately 1,900 Distinguished Service Medals awarded during the World War.

The Silver Star, instituted in 1935, is awarded to each person who, while an officer or enlisted man of the Army, is cited for gallantry in action in orders issued from the headquarters of a United States force commanded by, or which the appropriate command of a general officer, which citation does not warrant the award of a Medal of Honor or the Distinguished Service Cross. Many individuals were cited in orders and are therefore entitled to the Silver Star. However, only 11,517 members and former members of the Army have made application for and received this decoration, fourth in rank among the Army's decorations.

The Purple Heart under the War Department Orders which reestablished it, is awarded to persons who, while serving in the Army of the United States, perform any singularly meritorious act of extraordinary fidelity or essential service. A wound, which necessitates treatment by a medical officer, and which is received in action with an enemy of the United States, or as a result of an act of such enemy, may, in the judgment of the commander authorized to make the award, be construed as resulting from a singularly meritorious act of essential service. It has been estimated that approximately 186,500 persons would be entitled to this decoration from the World War, but so far only 77,958 have been issued.

The sixth decoration in order of rank is the Soldier's Medal, instituted in 1926. This decoration is awarded to
